Invitations Out.

and his bride will be at home after November 1 at Huttig, Ark.

Miss Gwathmey's marriage next month is of much interest to society in Richmond, where she has frequently visited as the guest of relatives. She is widely related throughout the State, and a great many Richmond people will go to "Cedarvale" to be present at the ceremony.

Greene-Staley.
The marriage of Miss Lonnie May Staley to Latimer F. Greene was celebrated on Wednesday evening, September 18, at 7:30, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hunter L. Dixon, of Sunset Hill.

The color scheme in the decorations was white and green. The lower floor of the house was thrown together for the occasion and decorated with lovely roses, white chrysanthemums, asparagus, ferns and palms.

The altar was an arrangement of asparagus, ferns and chrysanthemums in the recess of the bay windows, with pedestals holding silver candelabra with burning tapers. Ropes of smilax held the wedding bell over the altar and also formed a delicate tracery over the walls and lights.

While the guests were assembling, Mrs. Dungan Rhudy sang "I Love You Truly." Miss Mary Glen Baylor, a friend of the bride, rendered the nuptial music. The ribbons were held by Helen Dixon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harlow S. Dixon, and Thomas Dixon, son of the bride's sister. They made a charming picture, the little girl in her soft lace-trimmed muslin with broad white collar, and the groom in his best man William Bowles. Miss Sadie Grove, in pink chiffon draped over pink satin with bouquet of pink Killarney roses, was maid of honor. The bride entered on the arm of her father, who gave her away. Her bridegroom was of white charmeuse satin trimmed with lace and pearls, and she wore a heavy gold necklace and gold handkerchief clasp. Her mother had worn years before on a similar occasion.

Her bouquet was a shower of lilies of the valley and orchids and her veil of illusion caught with orange blossoms. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. C. Clements, and Rubenstein Melody in F was softly rendered on the piano.

In the library punch was served by Mrs. Harlow S. Dixon, where the gifts were displayed. In the dining room, where an elaborate buffet luncheon was served, the table was decorated with a silver basket containing pink Killarney roses, from which wide green and white ribbon streamers were drawn to the four corners of the table, where each one was attached to a wedding bell. Later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Grove left for an extended bridal trip in the East.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Grove, Miss Sadie Grove, Messrs. F. P. Staley, F. S. Staley and William Bowles, of Clifton Forge; Miss Mary Glen Baylor, of Bristol; Miss Ada Sanders, of Chilhowie; Mrs. Frank England, of Chattanooga; and Miss Evelyn Scott, of Johnson City.

NICHOLAS ACCUSED OF DOUBLE DEALING

King of Montenegro Subject of Considerable Abuse in Russia.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

King Nicholas of Montenegro is just at the present moment the object of a considerable amount of abuse in Russia, and will experience a good deal of difficulty in explaining his conduct to the Czar and to the government at St. Petersburg. In such a way as to relieve him of the imputation of double dealing. Always in straitened circumstances, by reason of his extravagance, and above all, of his mania for gambling, he has been drawing for more than two decades an annual allowance of near a million rubles, paid partly from the Emperor's privy purse, and partly from the Russian treasury, on the understanding that Montenegro would remain faithful to the interests of Russia in the Balkans; interest which as everyone knows are diametrically opposed to those of Austria.

It now turns out that since 1907, by virtue of a secret agreement signed by King Nicholas at Vienna, on the 13th of June, with the Austrian Foreign Minister, Count Goluchowski, the Montenegrin monarch has been drawing annual subsidy of 500,000 crowns from the Austrian treasury, on the understanding that he would give preference to the Austrian interests, the agreement containing a guarantee by Austria of Montenegro's independence. The secret treaty, moreover, binds King Nicholas to permit the occupation of the Montenegrin Port of Antivari by Austria, in the event of the latter's war with Italy, although the monarch of the latter country is the son-in-law of the Emperor of Austria. King Nicholas bound himself also not to raise any serious opposition to the annexation of the Turkish provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which he found it was Caplari, the capital of the island of Sardinia. There the ship was obliged to take fresh provisions on board, and then starting off again, he found himself, not at Antivari, but at Gibraltar, where the English Governor gave the Pasha a very warm and hospitable welcome.

Instead of being angry with his skipper, who had been so gratified at having been the first Egyptian statesman to make so great a journey, that he announced his intention of from thenceforth adding the name of England to his great stronghold to his own, and convinced, moreover, by this time, that he knew quite as much about navigation as the Captain Panajoti, he assumed the command of the ship himself. The result was not altogether fortunate, for when next they came in sight of land, it was not Marseilles, but Madeira, and they found themselves found their way back to Gibraltar, where they were again received with the utmost distinction by the English Governor, who was once more preparing to welcome them in state, when the ship was driven from her anchorage by a storm, which carried them out into the Bay of Biscay, and up the coast of France, until they found themselves with the ship in a terribly battered condition, with broken masts, six months from the time of starting on their voyage, not off Marseilles, but off Bordeaux, where the ambassador determined to land, and to abandon his ship.

Ismael and the members of his mission looked almost as battered as their craft, and were very directed to a sailor's lodging house, and it was only after he had been there about a week, that the authorities at Bordeaux became aware that they were there, retaining the Egyptian ambassador within their walls. He was speedily transferred to the leading hotel of the city, and when at once proceeded to his quarters, with the utmost distinction, becoming a great favorite. This was especially the case when, having been apostrophized by a drunkard in the street, who raised his hand to strike him, Ismael, absolutely impassive extended to him his jeweled snuff-box, to offer him a pinch of snuff. This courteous gesture completely paralyzed his assailant, who at once proceeded to apologize, while those who had witnessed the scene pronounced it to be a "delightful blend of Oriental courtesy with French wit and savoir faire."

The only Egyptian navy that I can recall in my time was a species of antiquated steam sloop-of-war, which lay at anchor as guard ship at the Mediterranean entrance of the Suez Canal, and never moved from thence. The time of her acquisition by the Egyptian Government, until she rotted to pieces where she lay. Her command, and never moved from thence, was borne the title and name of Admiral Privilegio Pasha; a delightful fellow, who like so many other of Khedive Ismael's retainers, had served under Emperor Maximilian in Mexico.

Privilegio was, however, a far more honest and chivalrous fellow than most of those adventurers of all lands who had placed their swords at the disposal of a monarch, and for whose Empire of Mexico was overthrown, it was Privilegio who was entrusted with the duty of conveying back to Europe all the jewels of Empress Charlotte, and likewise some of the most precious papers of her ill-fated consort. How he got these out of Mexico and brought them back in safety to Europe, is a dramatic story, and he had many test timonials from the reigning house of Austria, as to the fidelity and integrity with which he had fulfilled his mission. Indeed, it was at the instance of his monarch, Emperor Maximilian, that Ismael appointed him admiral-in-chief of the Egyptian one-horse, or I should say, one-ship navy.

Balkans that it is impossible for Montenegro to remain true to the interests of Russia, and to those of Austria-Hungary at one and the same time. She must sacrifice the one or the other, and in either case the King would seem to have been playing a double game.

In view of the announcement that the Egyptian government has given orders for the construction of several gunboats for service in patrolling the coasts on the Mediterranean and Red Sea, it may be timely to recall old Ismael Pasha, who figures in the history of Egypt as the father of her navy. He was the principal adviser, minister and statesman of Mehemmed Ali, the founder of the dynasty now reigning on the banks of the Nile, and in 1807 was detached by his sovereign on a mission to the court of the first Napoleon, with a rank of Ambassador. A ship was purchased by Ismael for the voyage, was armed with four cannon and was placed under the command of a Greek skipper named Panajoti, hailing from Marseilles, who professed to know every inch of the Mediterranean, the real fact of the case being, however, that he was wholly ignorant of navigation.

After several days at sea the vessel came in sight of land, which the skipper insisted was Marseilles, but which turned out to be Madeira. In spite of England being at war with France, the Egyptian Ambassador to the court of Napoleon was received with considerable distinction by the English governor, General Sir Alexander Baring, who even gave a great banquet and fete in his honor. The place that the ship reached was Tunis, which was also pronounced at first to be Marseilles. By the time Ismael had been informed of the error of the skipper, "Are you sure you know where you are going?" He received the most satisfactory assurances, but when next the ship was announced to be off Marseilles, he found it was Caplari, the capital of the island of Sardinia. There the ship was obliged to take fresh provisions on board, and then starting off again, he found himself, not at Antivari, but at Gibraltar, where the English Governor gave the Pasha a very warm and hospitable welcome.

Ismael and the members of his mission looked almost as battered as their craft, and were very directed to a sailor's lodging house, and it was only after he had been there about a week, that the authorities at Bordeaux became aware that they were there, retaining the Egyptian ambassador within their walls. Negro Accidentally Killed.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Appomattox, Va., September 23.—Arthur Morgan, colored eighteen years of age, was killed in a work train of the construction company of the Norfolk and Western Railway as the result of a pistol shot fired by Walter Hanes, colored, after Rice. Both negroes were laborers on the gang, and to-day all were in camp, as it was too rainy to work. While Hanes was carelessly handling the pistol a bullet entered the skull of Morgan, and death ensued immediately. Deputy Sheriff McKinney, with a posse, was at the scene in a few minutes, and Hanes and several other negroes were arrested and brought before Magistrate Moses. Upon examination of many witnesses, including the dead boy's father, it was proven to have been an accident, and the parties were dismissed.

AYERS AND STUART ADDRESS VOTERS

Large Crowd in Abingdon to Hear Democratic Campaign Speakers.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Abingdon, Va., September 23.—Despite the inclemency of the weather all day the great crowds came in from all sections of the country to hear Henry C. Stuart and General Ayers. It is estimated that between 1,500 and 2,000 voters greeted these distinguished Democrats. The courtroom where the speeches were made was crowded to the limit, and many were unable to get near enough to hear. Mr. Stuart was introduced by Preston Campbell. His speech was one of the strongest ever heard in this part of the State. Much of it was in humorous vein, and all of it was received with utmost enthusiasm. He reviewed in a thorough way the main issues of the presidential campaign, and John J. Stuart, who was introduced by General Ayers, who was heard with intense interest. His speech dealt mainly with the monopoly and tariff questions. Many Progressive Republicans were in the crowd.
